The transmission of infectious disease during aircraft turnaround.

Significant microbial risks are associated with ingestion of contaminated water, Direct human contact are probably more significant contributors to overall microbial disease risks.

Potable water is used in a variety of ways on board commercial transport aircraft, including direct human consumption, food preparation and sanitation/hygiene activities.

- Lavatory or lavatories used by sick traveller.
- Door handle, locking device, toilet seat, (tap), washbasin, adjacent walls and counter are all suspected areas.
- The seat of the traveller.
- Armrests.
- Seatbacks (the plastic and [or metal part).
- Tray tables.
- Seatbelt latches.
- Light and air controls, cabin crew call button and overhead compartment handles.
- Adjacent walls and windows.
- Individual video monitor.
